African-American GIs of WWII: Fighting for democracy abroad and at home

A Small but Meaningful Step

By Congresswoman Eddie Bernice Johnson

After much consideration, I reluctantly voted for a six-week stopgap spending bill carrying a bipartisan budget deal, ending a less-than-six-hour government shutdown on February 9. The $400 billion budget deal was based upon practical political considerations, and my belief that a bipartisan Congress that gets things done is in the best long-term interests of the American people.

The budget deal did not contain everything that I had wished, but it does support programs that are vitally important to those who elected me to wisely represent their concerns in Washington. For example, the budget agreement includes $89 billion in emergency supplemental appropriations to respond to the devastation in Texas caused by Hurricane Harvey, as well as other states impacted by Hurricanes Irma and Maria and the wildfires in California. It took more than five months for the Texas delegation to secure this funding for our state, which necessitated the cooperation of Republicans and Democrats alike to bring this desperately needed support to assist communities all throughout Texas during the recovery.

The legislation also achieves a number of items that are important to residents of the district that I represent, and to those who are concerned about the well-being of children and senior citizens in our country. The bill closes the Medicare Part D "donut hole" a year earlier than the Affordable Care Act, meaning seniors can expect to save thousands of dollars in out-of-pocket prescription drug costs. It allocates $6 billion to support various healthcare initiatives and battle the opioid crisis that is gripping the lives of many of our citizens. Additionally, the legislation contains funds for the expansion of community healthcare centers. These facilities are crucial to many people in North Texas.

Until the 21st century, the contributions of African-American soldiers in World War II barely registered in America's collective memory of that war.

The "tan soldiers," as the black press affectionately called them, were also for the most part left out of the triumphant narrative of America's "Greatest Generation." In order to tell their story of helping defeat Nazi Germany in my 2010 book, "Breath of Freedom," I had to conduct research in more than 40 different archives in the U.S. and Germany.

When a German TV production company, together with Smithsonian TV, turned that book into a documentary, the filmmakers searched U.S. media and military archives for two years for footage of black GIs in the final push into Germany and during the occupation of post-war Germany.

They watched hundreds of hours of film and discovered less than 10 minutes of footage. This despite the fact that among the 16 million U.S. soldiers who fought in World War II, there were about one million African-American soldiers.

They fought in the Pacific, and they were part of the victorious army that liberated Europe from Nazi rule. Black soldiers were also part of the U.S. Army of occupation in Germany after the war. Still serving in strictly segregated units, they were sent to democratize the Germans and expunge all forms of racism.

It was that experience that convinced many of these veterans to continue their struggle for equality when they returned home to the U.S. They were to become the foot soldiers of the civil rights movement – a movement that changed the face of our nation and inspired millions of repressed people across the globe.

As a scholar of German history and of the more than 70-year U.S. military presence in Germany, I have marveled at the men and women of that generation. They were willing to fight for democracy abroad, while being denied democratic rights at home in the U.S. Because of their belief in America's "democratic promise" and their sacrifices on behalf of those ideals, I was born into a free and democratic West Germany, just 10 years after that horrific war.

Fighting racism at home and abroad

By deploying troops abroad as warriors for and emissaries of American democracy, the military literally exported the African-American freedom struggle.

Beginning in 1933, when Adolf Hitler came to power, African-American activists and the black press used white America's condemnation of Nazi racism to expose and indict the abuses of Jim Crow at home. America's entry into the war and the struggle against Nazi Germany allowed civil rights activists to significantly step up their rhetoric.

Langston Hughes' 1943 poem, "From Beaumont to Detroit," addressed to America, eloquently expressed that sentiment: "You jim crowed me / Before Hitler rose to power- / And you are still jim crowing me- / Right now this very hour."

Believing that fighting for American democracy abroad would finally grant African-Americans full citizenship at home, civil rights activists put pressure on the U.S. government to allow African-American soldiers to "fight like men," side by side with white troops.

The military brass, disproportionately dominated by white Southern officers, refused. They argued that such a step would undermine military efficiency and negatively impact the morale of white soldiers. In an integrated military, black officers or NCOs might also end up commanding white troops. Such a challenge to the Jim Crow racial order based on white supremacy was seen as unacceptable.

The manpower of black soldiers was needed in order to win the war, but the military brass got its way; America's Jim Crow order was to be upheld. African-Americans were allowed to train as pilots in the segregated Tuskegee Airmen. The 92nd Buffalo Soldiers and 93rd Blue Helmets all-black divisions were activated and sent abroad under the command of white officers.

Despite these concessions, 90 percent of black troops were forced to serve in labor and supply units, rather than the more prestigious combat units. Except for a few short weeks during the Battle of the Bulge in the winter of 1944 when commanders were desperate for manpower, all U.S. soldiers served in strictly segregated units. Even the blood banks were segregated.

'A Breath of Freedom'

After the defeat of the Nazi regime, an Army manual instructed U.S. occupation soldiers that America was the "living denial of Hitler's absurd theories of a superior race," and that it was up to them to teach the Germans "that the whole concept of superiority and intolerance of others is evil." There was an obvious, deep gulf between this soaring rhetoric of democracy and racial harmony, and the stark reality of the Jim Crow army of occupation. It was also not lost on the black soldiers.

Post-Nazi Germany was hardly a country free of racism. But for the black soldiers, it was their first experience of a society without a formal Jim Crow color line. Their uniform identified them as victorious warriors and as Americans, rather than "Negroes."

Serving in labor and supply units, they had access to all the goods and provisions starving Germans living in the ruins of their country yearned for. African-American cultural expressions such as jazz, defamed and banned by the Nazis, were another reason so many Germans were drawn to their black liberators. White America was stunned to see how much black GIs enjoyed their time abroad, and how much they dreaded their return home to the U.S.

By 1947, when the Cold War was heating up, the reality of the segregated Jim Crow Army in Germany was becoming a major embarrassment for the U.S. government. The Soviet Union and East German communist propaganda relentlessly attacked the U.S. and challenged its claim to be the leader of the "free world." Again and again, they would point to the segregated military in West Germany, and to Jim Crow segregation in the U.S. to make their case.

Coming 'home'

Newly returned veterans, civil rights advocates and the black press took advantage of that Cold War constellation. They evoked America's mission of democracy in Germany to push for change at home. Responding to that pressure, the first institution of the U.S. to integrate was the U.S. military, made possible by Truman's 1948 Executive Order 9981. That monumental step, in turn, paved the way for the 1954 Supreme Court decision in Brown v. Board of Education.

The veterans who had been abroad electrified and energized the larger struggle to make America live up to its promise of democracy and justice. They joined the NAACP in record numbers and founded new chapters of that organization in the South, despite a wave of violence against returning veterans. The veterans of World War II and the Korean War became the foot soldiers of the civil rights movement in the 1950s and 1960s. Medgar Evers, Amzie Moore, Hosea Williams and Aaron Henry are some of the better-known names, but countless others helped advance the struggle.

About one-third of the leaders in the civil rights movement were veterans of World War II.

They fought for a better America in the streets of the South, at their workplaces in the North, as leaders in the NAACP, as plaintiffs before the Supreme Court and also within the U.S. military to make it a more inclusive institution. They were also the men of the hour at the 1963 March on Washington, when their military training and expertise was crucial to ensure that the day would not be marred by agitators opposed to civil rights.

"We structured the March on Washington like an army formation," recalled veteran Joe Hairston.

For these veterans, the 2009 and 2013 inaugurations of President Barack Obama were triumphant moments in their long struggle for a better America and a more just world. Many never thought they would live to see the day that an African-American would lead their country.

For nearly a year, I have been in constant contact with Nancy, a younger family member who lived in Japan for a year teaching English. She recently returned home to her beloved Houston and the next day returned to the University of Houston for advanced studies. Nancy and her friends traveled extensively over Japan with ease via the acclaimed rail system without incident. Several years ago, I interviewed a former Lincoln High School graduate who spent two years in China teaching English.

In Shanghai, China, they boast the fastest commercial train in the world which operates at a speed of 431km(268 mph).

For decades we have heard about the 'high speed rail' transportation in Japan and China from students and various world travelers. Shinkansen Trains, Japan, are celebrating their 50th anniversary. The famed bullet train claims to be the world's longest high speed rail. The Hayabusa is the fastest train in Japan with a maximum speed of 320km (200mph).

The Federal Railroad Administration (FRA) has issued the Draft Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) for the proposed Dallas-to-Houston High Speed Rail Project. This route, the first in the nation, will connect North Texas and South Texas. A series of public hearings are being held in and around the State of Texas now ending on March 9, 2018. I attended the public hearing held at Wilmer Hutchins High School in January, 2018. (You can stay up-to-date on this project: www.fra.dot.gov/page/P0700 or just Google: Texas High Speed Rail Project). This project is estimated to create more than 10,000 jobs and will cross ten(10) counties in Texas. The current proposal is to construct and operate a 240 mile, for profit, train system connecting Dallas and Houston using the Japanese N700 Tokaido Shinkansen technology. This technology is totally electric. This is a proposed 90 minute trip on a 'closed' system, meaning that the train will run on dedicated tracks. . . not sharing any intersection with roadways. Amazingly and as initially proposed the tracks will run mainly on elevated tracks and beams adjacent to crossings, existing infrastructure, which will not interfere with wildlife, wetlands, floodplains, and the forever favorite Texas Bluebonnet fields we all enjoy. As imagined, there is direct and absolute opposition to the high speed rail in Texas. But progress speaks.

There are definite advantages to having the high speed rail first and in Texas. Texas has a projected growth pattern over the next decade that will demand an environmental way to move and protect the population. Texas and its agencies cannot control the growth. As soon as we complete a freeway, it is overwhelmingly crowded and toll tags on tollways are NOT the answer. Texas has the land mass and the rail will lead to net reductions of greenhouse gas emissions. Without the high speed rail, we can expect a 200% increase in vehicular traffic on I45 between Dallas and Houston shortly. Let's face a simple fact. Our travel demand is increasing so rapidly and our infrastructure deteriorating even faster, we cannot keep up with the growing demand. We need a proactive and aggressive transportation plan for all the growing cities in Texas and beyond.

Can we please move into the 21st Century. Tell the Federal Railroad Administration (FRA) you support the Texas Bullet Train.

The legislation extends the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP) by an additional four years. Community health centers are funded in the bill, and funding was approved to make the necessary repairs for clinics that service our veterans. Eligible seniors will see a reduction in their share of drug costs under the legislation. Significant funding for medical research is included in the legislation. Medical research and development is crucial to finding cures for disease and to scientific advancement in our society. The measure even addresses climate change by expanding a tax credit for companies that engage in processes that capture and store pollutants that result from fossil fuels. It is generally believed that a reduction in carbon emissions will led to few drastic changes in the global climate. It also allocates money for our nation's infrastructure needs for the repair and construction of highways, bridges, railroad lines and airports.

While the budget did not contain everything of importance to me, I believe that it was a step in the right direction, particularly in the life of the Congress, which has been paralyzed by inaction. Nobody benefits from a government shutdown. In fact, often times the ones who suffer the most are the seniors and other underserved segments of our population who depend heavily on the federal government to provide healthcare, housing, and support. I voted for the bipartisan budget agreement so that those who need us the most are not left carrying the burden of Congressional inaction.

BE KIND! Never speak harsh words. Be kind and gentle with your tongue. For it has been said that the tongue can be like a sword. Think long before you criticize your neighbor. Your tongue can be nasty. Living is one of the most beautiful things in the world. But the tongue can kill!

Migos' Quavo Shines in Celebrity Game

(AP) - Quavo is known for dropping beats and delivering rhymes as one-third of Atlanta's hip-hop trio Migos.

He can also make buckets on the basketball court.

Quavo was named MVP after scoring a game-high 19 points to lead Team Clippers to a 75-66 win over Team Lakers in the NBA All-Star Celebrity Game on Friday.

When Migos members Offset and Takeoff arrived to take their courtside seats just before the start of the third quarter, Quavo had already piled up nine points, three rebounds and one assist. A former high school quarterback, he scored six of his team's first 11 points.

Showcasing a smooth shot and ability to drive to the basket, Quavo finished 7 of 10 from the field. He also had five rebounds, three assists, two steals and a block.

It's been a good year for Quavo, with Migos' new album "Culture II" debuting at No. 1. He was also on the sidelines for Georgia's thrilling overtime win in the Rose Bowl to advance to the College Football Playoff title game, and will be back in Southern California in April when Migos performs at the Coachella music festival.

In an event usually known for the antics of the Hollywood celebrities participating, the athletes instead took over to display some solid hoops.

Andre De Grasse, the Canadian sprinter who won a silver medal in the 200 meters and bronze in the 100 at the Rio Olympics in 2016, had 17 points and six rebounds for Team Clippers.

TV host Rachel DeMita, a McDonald's All-American who played at Old Dominion, led Team Lakers with 17 points. Former NBA player Nate Robinson added 14 points, and boxer Terence Crawford had nine points and 12 rebounds.

Actor Jamie Foxx engaged in some pregame trash talk toward WNBA star Candace Parker, but the showdown never materialized. He played 8:20 and did not score.

Singer/song writer Justin Bieber wasn't able to duplicate his MVP performance from the 2011 celebrity game, finishing with four points and two rebounds. Bieber certainly fared much better than he did in last year's NHL All-Star celebrity game in Los Angeles, when he was memorably checked into the boards by Hall of Fame defenseman Chris Pronger.

But the game's most interesting athlete had to be golfer Bubba Watson.

He shot a 1-under 70 in the second round of the Genesis Open at Riviera before making his way to the LA Convention Center to play for Team Clippers. Watson is tied for seventh place at 4-under, three shots behind leaders Patrick Cantlay, Graeme McDowell and Sam Saunders.

Watson said before the game that he got some grief from his fellow golfers about taking up a second sport while in contention.

"When you have a chance to win like that, why would you still want to come over here? Cause life is short," said Watson, who had two points, three rebounds, one assist and one steal. "Life is fun, man, and so I want to be here."

Why heart health is important for women with diabetes

If you have diabetes, you have a higher-than-average risk of having a heart attack or a stroke. While men and women generally have similar rates of Type 2 diabetes, women are twice as likely to have heart disease.

In fact, heart disease is the leading cause of death for women in the U.S., killing one woman every 60 seconds. It's the leading cause of death for African American and white women and, among Hispanic women, it causes as many deaths as cancer each year.

Two-thirds of women who die suddenly of heart disease have no previous symptoms. Women are more likely than men to have the following heart attack symptoms:

- Pain in the neck, jaw, abdomen or back
- Nausea
- Shortness of breath
- Dizziness
- Fatigue

More than 90 percent of women have one or more risk factors for heart disease. Women of all ages can get heart disease. While the risk gets higher with age, lifestyle, diet, smoking and hereditary conditions can increase a younger person's risk.

Risk factors for heart disease include:

- Diabetes
- Smoking
- High blood pressure
- High LDL (bad) cholesterol
- Obesity
- Poor diet
- Physical inactivity

If you have a family history of heart disease, there are still steps you can take to lower your risk. Below are some important steps women can take to reduce their risk of heart disease:

- Know your risk factors; have your blood pressure checked regularly, along with your cholesterol and triglycerides
- Stop smoking
- Eat healthy, including lean proteins such as white meat chicken and lean ground beef, plenty of fresh fruits and vegetables. Check out the Healthy Eating video at www.parklanddiabetes.com/healthy for more tips on eating healthy with diabetes
- Find ways to relax more and

lower your stress level

• Get moving and exercise more. Check out the Move Your Body video at www.parklanddiabetes.com/move for easy tips on how to get more exercise into your day

If you are a woman who has diabetes, it's very important to keep your blood sugar within the range recommended by your doctor. If you don't know how to manage your blood sugar, make an appointment with a health care provider to get more information on keeping your diabetes under control.
