Marnese Elder named Parkland's Associate Chief Talent Officer

Marnese Barksdale Elder

DALLAS – Marnese Barksdale Elder has been named Parkland Health & Hospital System's Senior Vice President and Associate Chief Talent Officer. Elder is returning to Parkland after a two year absence during which time she served as President of the Dallas Black Chamber of Commerce as well as owner and CEO of Mecca Management, a boutique talent and stakeholder management company.

Prior to joining the Chamber, Elder had been with Parkland since 2000, most recently serving as Vice President and Associate Chief Talent Officer. Upon her return, Elder will provide operational assessment and direction to support Parkland's Chief Talent Officer in the system's Office of Talent Management division.

The division encompasses traditional human resources functions such as benefits, compensation and employee relations plus additional service areas including but not limited to: talent acquisition and workforce planning, talent analytics, diversity and inclusion, learning and development, engagement and culture, language services and pastoral care.

"Having worked with Marnese previously, I've seen first-hand the passion she has for our mission and workforce," says Parkland's Executive Vice President and Chief Talent Officer Corey Jackson, JD, SPHR, CCP. "She was instrumental in shaping the employee experience for so many in our organization, including my own. We're fortunate to have her keen insight, dedication and expertise return to Parkland."

Along with her operational expertise, Elder brings to the job her extensive knowledge of Parkland's compensation, benefits, performance management, disability/FMLA and worker's compensation functions. Along with serving as Vice President of Talent Management Operations, she also served as Director of Human Resources and Interim Director of Talent Acquisition.

Social Security and Medicare Trustees Reports

Washington, DC — In response to the Social Security and Medicare Trustees reports released today, CEPR senior economist Dean Baker issued the following statement:

"There were few notable changes in the 2018 trustees reports. In the case of the Social Security trustees report, the changes were minor, with the overall balance deteriorating slightly because of the change in the 75-year horizon. (The year added to the horizon — 2092 — looks worse than the year it replaces, 2017.)

"However, there is a noteworthy deterioration in the projected balance for Medicare. The 2018 report projects a shortfall over the 75-year horizon of 0.82 percent of payroll. This compares to a projected shortfall in the 2017 report of just 0.64 percent of payroll. This is due to the more rapid projected growth in spending in the immediate future. The date when the program is first projected to face a shortfall is now 2024 rather than 2029, which was projected last year.

"The new projections show Medicare spending in 2024 at a level 1.6 percent higher than the projection from 2017. By 2030, spending is projected to be 3.3 percent higher than the projection from the 2017 report.

"It is worth noting that Medicare's finances had improved enormously under the Obama administration. The 2009 trustees report, the first of the Obama administration, projected a shortfall over the 75-year horizon equal to 3.88 percent of the projected payroll. At the time, the projected shortfall in Medicare was almost twice as large as the projected shortfall in Social Security, which was 2.0 percent of payroll.

"The 2009 report also projected that by 2018, Medicare's expenses would be 4.12 percent of payroll. By comparison, the report released today puts Medicare spending at 3.42 percent of payroll. If Medicare spending had continued on the path projected in 2009, it would already be facing a shortfall.

"The extent to which the policy changes of the Obama years slowed the course of spending can be debated, but it is indisputable that spending slowed sharply from its projected path. Unfortunately, it now appears to be accelerating again. The 2018 projections already imply a long-term shortfall that is almost 30 percent larger than the shortfall projected in 2017. This is a disturbing change that hopefully is not part of a trend towards higher projected and actual cost growth."

Prior to her work as Health and Wellness Administrator,

Elder served as member relations manager for Parkland Community Health Plan, Inc., Parkland's Medicaid Managed Care program.

"Parkland plays a pivotal role in our community – there's just really no place like it," Elder stated. "It's an honor to rejoin the talented individuals and teams across the system working every day to care for our patients, their families and Dallas County."

Elder is a member of several business organizations including the Dallas Regional Chamber's Leadership Dallas Class of 2018, the Dallas County Small Business Enterprise Advisory Committee, the North Texas

WomenHeart Celebrates Heart Disease Heroes, Survivors

By Lauren Poteat (NNPA Newswire Contributor)

In the battle to save the lives of our mothers, daughters and sisters, "WomenHeart: The National Coalition for Women with Heart Disease," is one of the greatest allies that families have against the deadly disease, the leading cause of death among women in the United States.

WomenHeart, "the nation's only patient-centered organization solely serving millions of American women living with or at risk for heart disease," according to the group's website, recently celebrated the people and organizations that are on the frontlines of that battle, during the 18th Annual Wenger Awards in Washington, D.C.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), an astounding one in four women die from heart disease every year.

Nearly 8 percent of Black women have coronary heart disease—the highest rate among all women; about 6 percent of White women have coronary heart disease.

As an actress and a natural advocate for healthy living, Chandra Wilson, who plays Dr. Miranda Bailey on the hit ABC television show "Grey's Anatomy," highlighted the importance of regular heart screenings and the need for better healthcare access for women, during the awards ceremony. Wilson was honored with the "Excellence in Media" award during the event.

"Nobody knows your battle better than you do...there are things that you need a physician to specifically listen for," Wilson said. "You need to know your statistics, specifically women of color."

Wilson also talked about the impact of heart disease on her own family.

"Even though, women face challenges with heart disease that are somewhat different from men, my father passed away from heart disease at age 55," Wilson said. "And while he was aware of heart disease, he was never taught 'Okay, this is what you do. Here are the things that can help,' which is so important."

During the Wenger Awards ceremony, Dr. Roxana Mehran ("Excellence in Medical Leadership," Dr. Clyde W.

Yancy ("Excellence in Medical Research") and Rep. Debbie Dingel (D-Mich.) ("Excellence in Public Service") were also recognized for their efforts in fighting heart disease. Actor and activist Lamman Rucker served as the master of ceremonies for the event.

Evan McGabe, the chair of the board of directors for WomenHeart, rallied attendees to get active and involved in learning more about their own heart statistics and overall health status.

"We really can't believe that so many women still don't know their risk of heart disease in this country," McGabe said. "In our organization, we teach women how to be proactive about their health. We want to help women, not to dismiss their symptoms."

McGabe added that WomenHeart works to empower women so that they can empower others.

According to the CDC, the most common symptoms of heart disease include chest discomfort, upper back pain, indigestion, heartburn, nausea/vomiting, extreme fatigue, upper body discomfort, shortness of breath, sudden weakness, paralysis in the limbs, blurred vision and impaired speech.

The risk factors for heart disease include high blood pressure, high LDL cholesterol, smoking, diabetes, obesity, poor diet and physical inactivity.

To reduce the chances of getting heart disease, the CDC recommends that people monitor their blood pressure on a regular basis, receive regular screenings for diabetes, limit smoking, eat healthy, lower stress and limit alcohol consumption.

Closing out the event, Rucker gushed over the opportunity to be able to be a part of such a powerful movement.

"I've had a relationship with the Association of Black Cardiologist for a number of years and have done heart health work with the American Heart Association," Rucker said. "As an artist, a big part of our purpose behind the work that we are doing is to not just live out our dreams and be stars, but to inform, uplift and inspire people through the work that we do."

Rucker continued: "Just being able to be a part of [WomenHeart and the Wenger Awards] is tremendous."

Warriors, Cavs stars say they're not going to White House

CLEVELAND (AP) — Stephen Curry and LeBron James spoke their minds last year. They have not changed their minds this year.

No matter whose team wins the NBA championship, neither superstar will be at the White House anytime soon.

On the day when the Philadelphia Eagles were supposed to be there to commemorate winning the Super Bowl — a visit that was canceled by President Donald Trump and had the White House accusing players who weren't planning on attending of abandoning their fans — Curry and James were among those speaking out at the NBA Finals in support of the Eagles.

"I'm not surprised. It's typical of him," James, the Cleveland star, said Tuesday of Trump's decision to cancel. "I know no matter who wins this series, no one wants the invite anyway. So it won't be Golden State or Cleveland going."

On the eve of Game 3 of the Warriors-Cavaliers series, politics dominated the conversation.

Curry raised Trump's ire last year when he said he wouldn't go to the White House, prompting the President to disinvite him and the champion Golden State Warriors.

Curry said Tuesday that he spoke with a current Eagles player about the team's decision-making process and how it went deeper than disagreeing with Trump policies and the ongoing issue of some NFL players choosing not to stand for the pregame playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

"It's an important conversation, but you can't control what other people try to do, or try to control the narrative or things like that," Curry said.

Curry said the team has been on the same page after his comments last year and Trump's subsequent revoking of the Warriors' invitation. "And every team that's won a championship since then has gone through that."

There has been clear tension between many star athletes and the current administration throughout the Trump presidency. Trump has often blasted the NFL players who have kneeled for the national anthem, a protest that started in 2016 when San Francisco 49ers quarterback Colin Kaepernick did so to raise awareness of racism — more specifically, the killing of black men by police.

Trump said the Eagles' event was called off because some of their players "disagree with their President because he insists that they proudly stand for the National Anthem, hand on heart, in honor of the great men and women of our military and the people of our country."

No Eagles players kneeled during the anthem last season.

"Instead the decision was made to lie, and paint the picture that these players are anti-America, anti-flag and anti-military," the Eagles' Malcolm Jenkins wrote in a statement posted to social media Tuesday.

The WNBA champion Minnesota Lynx were not invited to the White House to celebrate their most recent title, something James called "laughable." Instead, the Lynx will spend Wednesday giving away new sneakers to more than 300 needy kids in Washington. Villanova, the reigning NCAA men's champion, has not revealed if an invitation was sent. Many members of the U.S. Olympic Team that competed earlier this year in South Korea did not attend a White House reception.

Hockey's Pittsburgh Penguins and baseball's Houston Astros have accepted invitations to the White House for the traditional meeting with the President in recent months, as have several college teams. When the New England Patriots went last year, half the team chose not to attend.

The Warriors, in lieu of going to the White House, spent that day taking a group of children to the National Museum of African American History and Culture a few miles away.

"I think the President has made it pretty clear he's going to try to divide us, all of us in this country, for political gain," said Golden State coach Steve Kerr, who has often criticized Trump and his policies. "So it's just the way it is. I think we all look forward to the day when we can go back to just having a celebration of athletic achievement and celebrate Americans for their achievement, their good deeds."

Kerr also lauded the Eagles for being what he called "fantastic citizens in their own community."

"It will be nice when we can just get back to normal in three years," Kerr said.

The overwhelming issue surrounding the Eagles' planned visit was that most of the team was not going to attend, and that was a major factor in Trump deciding to pull the invitation.

"What else do you expect Trump to do?" Golden State's Kevin Durant said. "When somebody says they don't want to come to the White House, he disinvites them. So the photo op don't look bad. We get it at this point. But it's good that guys are sticking to what they believe in and what they want to do. Like guys said before me, I'm sure whoever wins this series won't be going."
