SUNSET HIGH SCHOOL PROGRAM PREPARES STUDENTS FOR JOBS IN SHERIFF'S DEPARTMENT

Seven seniors from Sunset High School are expected to start well-paying, full-time jobs with the Dallas Sheriff's Department after they graduate later this month.

The students are already on their way to being trained as detention service officers, which start at $18 an hour, thanks to a program Sunset High School offers with the Dallas Sheriff's Department.

The Dallas County Sheriff's Law Enforcement Preparation Program (LEPP) acquainted the students with the nature and complexity of law enforcement. The program in many ways mirrored the basic training a recruit goes through to become an officer.

Speakers from across the sheriff's department—including chiefs and other staff—talked with students about their roles in the office. Each student went through an interview and application process to join the program.

"These students took the program very seriously, and many of them are excited about joining the sheriff's department as soon as they graduate," said Teresa Sterling, who oversees LEPP at Sunset High School.

Deputy Sheriff John White said LEPP is a good way for the sheriff's department to recruit talented future officers. The sheriff's department recently lowered its minimum employment age from 19 to 18.

"For those who are the right fit, the sheriff's department is a great place for a career," White said.

About seven of the Sunset students are expected to sign on to join the Sheriff's Department at a student job fair being held at the high school on May 20. In addition to the sheriff's department, other employers offering good full-time careers will be at the job fair.

"We want to set all of our students up for success, whether it's for college or a viable, well-paying career out of high school," Sterling said. "We are very proud of all of our students."

JARVIS CHRISTIAN COLLEGE ENACTUS TEAM WINS TWO NATIONAL TITLES

Jarvis Christian College proudly salutes the campus-based Enactus team for receiving two national awards during the Enactus USA National EXPO in St. Louis, Missouri, on May 16, 2016.

The College was among five institutions selected as first place grand prize winners in AIG's Wellness at Work Topic Competition. The national competition provided an opportunity for 550 Enactus United States teams to showcase how they plan to empower businesses to adopt a well-being, health and/or safety initiative that utilizes wearable technology to improve the wellness of their employees.

The Jarvis Christian College Enactus team received a plaque and a $3,500 Project Award to continue their Wellness at Work project through Nov. 30, 2016. Teams will be connected to AIG executives and resources to aid in the implementation of their project.

The Enactus team also was awarded a third place national title and $3,000 plus $1,500 for project expenses in Unilever's Bright Future Project National Competition.

The Bright Future Project mobilized 20 Enactus teams to implement projects that empower food-insecure families in the United States to apply sustainable solutions toward addressing root causes of hunger.

Jarvis Christian College's "Head Start to 1000 Healthy Hearts" initiative included three components:

- Nutrition - imparts knowledge and skills needed to establish healthy cooking and eating habits to fight childhood hunger.
- Smart food budgeting and shopping - teaches children and adults how to shop sensibly on a limited budget.
- Food preparation - teaches children how to prepare healthy meals and snacks and to make smart food choices.

Unilever announced the finalists to an audience of 3,000 people, including executives from 100 corporations.

Enactus team members include Cheston Living, Keshanti Tidwell and Daniel Terrell. Chestley Talley, Director of Career Services, is campus adviser for the College's Enactus Team.

College Choice Releases 2016 Ranking of the Best Historically Black Colleges and Universities

PRNewswire--College Choice (<http://www.collegechoice.net>) has published its annual ranking of best historically black colleges and universities. The ranking can be viewed at <http://www.collegechoice.net/rankings/best-historically-black-colleges-universities/>.

Robert Hand, Associate Editor of the ranking, says, "Students who are considering an HBCU would benefit from the traditions set forth by these universities. They were created in a tradition of making their students self-reliant and encouraged them to think for themselves, making these universities more rigorous in their academic pursuits, which lead students to come out of university with a higher quality of education."

"Currently, HBCUs are going through transitions. As the world becomes more culturally diverse, many of these colleges and universities are seeing an influx of non-black students enrolling in their institutions. This is a welcome change for the schools, many of which have publicly encouraged students of other races to attend their schools and learn more about their cultures," said Christian Amondon, Managing Editor of College Choice.

Spelman College in Atlanta, Georgia, tops the list, followed by Howard University in Washington, DC, and Hampton University in Hampton, Virginia.

DeSoto ISD Dropout Recovery Program Celebrates Soon To Be Graduates!

Brittany Blake, Kayla Richard, Valerie Viveros and Bryan Robles (not pictured) came in and GOT 'ER DONE! Despite the number of courses needed to meet graduation requirements, they decided on a plan of action, and did not lose sight of it. They came early, stayed late, worked nights and weekends to complete courses needed for graduation

In celebration of the pending graduation ceremonies, WINGS staff invited students and families to a luncheon recognizing the significant strides that have been made. WINGS (Where I Now Gain Success) is the DeSoto ISD dropout prevention and recovery program launched in 2005. It is an alternative program for students to attend self.

Principal Homer Webb encouraged the students to continue to make progress by making good decisions. While announcing available scholarship information to the students, Webb shared his personal story of making poor choices that resulted in the loss of his college scholarship. "Every month I write a check to pay off a student loan and I will have to do that for 30 years. How many of you could use an extra $200 per month? Then make good decisions!"

The ceremony recognized student milestones and celebrated business partners and mentors who had supported the staff and students throughout the school year.

RUSSELL SIMMONS REPAYS RUSHCARD HOLDERS, PUSHES FOR CREDIT REFORMS

VGOODLOE2 Simmons said that he's going to spend a lot more money in the Black community, in peacekeeping programs, and on art education, following the settlement his company reached over the class action lawsuit over the well-publicized computer glitch that affected thousands of RushCard users. (Valerie Goodloe/NPPA News Wire)

By Stacy M. Brown (NNPA News Wire Contributing Writer)

Russell Simmons is just starting to regain a little normalcy in his life.

He's back at yoga and the hip-hop and business mogul is even able to run some errands without worrying about whether a disgruntled RushCard holder might verbally attack him or worse.

Simmons never hung his head despite mounting - if unfair - criticism that rocked the music impresario when his innovative prepaid RushCard experienced a computer glitch last fall that prevented hundreds of thousands of card holders from accessing their money.

"I took full responsibility. It's my card and I made sure to reach out to card holders personally and I reached into my own pocket to help people with their rent, their medicine or whatever emergency that may have come up," Simmons said.

"All I knew how to do was to make good on it and try to make the people that were damaged whole again," he said.

Simmons has done even more and he continues his push to have the underbanked and the underserved benefit.

"My mission is to eventually see that when someone pays their rent on time, pays their light bill on time, that these things go on their credit reports," Simmons said. "It should be and if I can't get regulators and the credit bureaus to do it, then I will have to start my own credit bureau."

If that sounds like a bit of a stretch, Simmons points to his starting the RushCard as proof that real change can happen. "I was first, no one else did this until I came out with my card," he said, noting that he's not only the face of RushCard, but along with his American Express and other items in his wallet is his own RushCard that he regularly uses.

"Look, we were the ones who invented this and what I don't like is when people refer to us as a celebrity company," Simmons said. "All of what American Express is doing, all of what Chase Manhattan did, we did first. We're a virtual bank. The other thing is that we didn't build this company to make money when we started and, really, I didn't think it would become a business but it did and I go to work every day to try and improve the service we provide."

Simmons said his fight for credit building is an uphill battle, but it's a battle that can be won.

It's as much part of his life as yoga, he said.

"You pay rent every month for eight years on a RushCard, why can't you get a mortgage? I think that's a travesty. I think a lot of the big companies like MasterCard, the Visas, the others that do the processing and infrastructure work; a lot of us could come together and force them to accept this information on credit reports of the world," Simmons said.

As Simmons pushes for changes in policies in the credit industry, he's leaving the door open for starting his own credit reporting agency.

In the aftermath of the much-publicized computer glitch - which Simmons still refers to as a "tsunami" - the business leader provided free service to card holders for five months, sacrificing all of his company's profits to do so. He also reached a more than $20 million settlement from a class action lawsuit filed against RushCard, because of the glitch.

"I'm glad to do it. I had put aside $25 million," Simmons said, noting that the card isn't just for communities that have been forgotten and underserved by banks. "There's no reason why small businesses can't use a Rush Business Card. We just added a feature, just now where if you lose your card, you can turn your card off instantly through an app. Then you can turn it back on."

Simmons continued: "This card should be for affluent people as well as underserved community members and it should be the wave of the future for millennials. This is the bank for millennials and the growth rate for our company is 70 percent millennials, when it used to be single mothers. Millennials who don't like banks are coming in our direction and we haven't even begun the branding exercise to speak to them."

Simmons said that he didn't mind paying the $20 million settlement. "I don't mind paying the $20 million. I don't mind that that was our cost. I am going to spend a lot more money than that in the community, in my peacekeeping programs, in RUSH and art education," he said.

Simmons said so much more will soon be announced and he's confident that RushCard holders and others will be pleased. "We are going to be in the community in a way that we've never been," Simmons said.

BERNIE AND DONALD ARE TWO SIDES OF SAME ANGRY, WHITE COIN

By Julianne Malveaux (NNPA News Wire Columnist)

For all their dueling ideologies, Senator Bernie Sanders and "presumptive Republican nominee" Donald Trump are two sides of the same coin. Both of them are angry, so intensely so, that they are inciting a destructive anger among their followers. When Republicans brawled and pushed and shoved at Trump rallies, I never anticipated the flip side - the fistcuffs and rhetoric at the Nevada state Democratic convention, the likes of which might have put Trump terrorists to shame. Both the Chump Trumps and the Burning Bernies are being led by whining, angry, entitled White men, separated by ideology, but joined by both outrage and naivete.

I don't think either Bernie or "Duh" Donald planned to get as far along in the presidential process as they have so far. Senator Sanders proudly carries the redistributionist flag with rousing rhetoric about social and economic justice. His agenda seems to have been to raise these issues aggressively and he did. His presence in the campaign pushed Hillary hard to the left and made her engage with constituencies she might otherwise have ignored. For all his success, I don't think Sanders expected to have more than 1500 delegates to his credit. And now that he has them he doesn't know what to do with them. Both he and "Duh" Donald are publicly floundering, signaling that they never had a winning, or graceful losing, plan.

Secretary Clinton and her followers shouldn't be so hard on Bernie, though. While they should not demand that he get out of the race, he is well advised to tone it down. I sat with women at the 2008 campaign who sobbed their way through then-Senator Clinton's concession speech and appeal for party unity. I debated a PUMA (Party Unity My "Hind Parts") activist who swore she would not support nominee Obama. In 2008, Hillary devotees were as passionate as Bernie devotees are now.

The kumbaya moment comes in July in Philly, not just yet. It reflects poorly on the Hillary camp to dismiss or ignore those who are passionate about Senator Sanders' decibel, if she every managed to project such rage, she'd be written off as a crazy lady and peripheralized. But when the angry, White men yell and scream and whine and lie, they are celebrated not condemned. That sounds like a double standard to me.

Both Bernie and "Duh" Donald are whining about rules they say are rigged against them, but the rules may have favored them. Donald Trump has garnered a greater percentage of delegates than votes because of the way some states have chosen to award delegates. He wants more, but he failed to invest as much time learning the rules as some of his competitors did. Senator Sanders says he should have more delegates, but if he had to play under republican rules, he'd have fewer.

Sanders. At the same time, it is important to note that extreme anger is a unique privilege of White men. Imagine then-nominee Obama raging at Hillary in the way that Bernie has. His temperament would have been sliced and diced and parsed and inspected and he would have been so damaged by the conversation that it might have affected his electoral results. If Secretary Clinton ever managed to get her voice to Bernie's decibel, if she every managed to project such rage, she'd be written off as a crazy lady and peripheralized.

That sounds like a double standard to me. Sanders and Trump have positioned themselves as outsiders, but they want insiders to roll out the red carpet for them, because they jumped into a game they haven't mastered. They haven't worked at establishing a foundation, but they are demanding the keys to the house. They aren't willing to put the work into reforming our flawed, two-party system. Instead, they are finding unfairness when none is there, whining when work might make a difference, and leveraging their angry, White maleness into voter approval.

A Little Bit of Faith: Learn the Lesson

By Colleen White

If you're a parent, there are times you have to discipline your child. You discipline your child out of love for him or her. You're not disciplining them simply to be mean, but you're also trying to help to correct something they may have done wrong in order for them to do better. When a child is being disciplined they don't like it, but as they continue to mature and grow, they will see that what you did out of love helped to make them a better person and build their character.

We are the same way with our Heavenly Father. We are His children. There are times that He must discipline us in order to correct something that has gone awry. While we are being disciplined we don't like it, but if we are being truthful with ourselves, we will be thankful for His disciplining us in the end.

In the book Hebrews it says, "No discipline seems pleasant at the time, but painful. Later on, however, it produces a harvest of righteousness and peace for those who have been trained by it," (Hebrews 12:11). Therefore, when we are disciplined, in love, by our Heavenly Father, He does it for our good. Learning how to be obedient and to have a repentant heart, can help us to grow in our character and learn to be more like Him.

If a parent truly loves his children, he will discipline them in love. Christ disciplines those He loves. Therefore, if you're being disciplined at this point of your life, by Christ, learn the lesson, repent, and turn away from it and thank God for showing you how to do better. Our character is built and strengthened through our obedience to Him.

Amen? Amen.

Brief Sports News

NEW YORK (AP) Tom Brady's lawyers asked a federal appeals court for a new hearing before an expanded panel of judges, telling them that it is not just a silly dispute over underinflated footballs - it's the basic right to a fair process that is shared by all union workers.

Setting the stage for the "Deflategate" scandal to stretch into its third season, and putting Brady's four-game suspension back in the hands of the courts, the players' union asked all 13 judges of the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to hear the case that a three-judge panel decided in the league's favor.

In the appeal filed on Monday, Brady's lawyers said that Commissioner Roger Goodell's "biased, agenda-driven, and self-approving 'appeal' ruling must be vacated."

The 2-1 decision by the panel, they wrote, "will fuel unpredictability in labor arbitrations everywhere and make labor arbitration increasingly capricious and undesirable for employers and employees alike."

The NFL had no comment.

WASHINGTON (AP) - National Football League officials improperly sought to influence a government study on the link between football and brain disease, according to a senior House Democrat in a report issued Monday.

New Jersey Rep. Frank Pallone says the league tried to strong-arm the National Institutes of Health into taking the project away from a researcher who the NFL feared was biased.

The NFL had agreed to donate $30 million to the NIH to fund brain research but backed out after the institutes went ahead with a $16 million grant to prominent Boston University researcher Robert Stern. He's a leading expert on the link between football and brain diseases such as chronic traumatic encephalopathy. Taxpayers are instead bearing the cost.

The NFL denied Pallone's findings.

WEDDINGTON, N.C. (AP) - Carolina Panthers linebacker Shaq Thompson was cited for a head-on accident that injured former Duke quarterback Anthony Boone over the weekend, a North Carolina Highway Patrol trooper said.

Trooper John Burgin told The Associated Press that Thompson's vehicle collided with one driven by Boone on Sunday morning near Weddington, located about 20 miles southeast of Charlotte. Burgin said Thompson told authorities in his statement that he reached down to pick up his dropped cellphone, leading to a citation for driving left of the center line.

Burgin said Boone broke his pelvis but his injuries weren't life-threatening. Thompson wasn't injured.

Thompson had alcohol in his system but wasn't impaired and alcohol wasn't considered a factor in the accident, Burgin said.

BASEBALL

SAN DIEGO (AP) - Tony Gwynn's widow and two children filed a lawsuit seeking to hold the tobacco industry accountable for the Hall of Famer's death.

The suit was filed in San Diego Superior Court by Alicia Gwynn and her children, Tony Jr. and Anisha Gwynn-Jones.

The suit says Gwynn started dipping as a 17-year-old freshman ballplayer at San Diego State. He died of cancer of the right parotid salivary gland on June 16, 2014, at 54.

The lawsuit said Gwynn dipped in his lower right cheek for more than 30 years.

The court filing lists eight defendants, including Altria Group Corp. and US Smokeless Tobacco Co. LLC., and two people the suit says ran an intramural softball team called "Skoal Brothers" at San Diego State in the late 1970s. The "Skoal Brothers" provided free samples of smokeless tobacco products, the lawsuit said.

Altria spokesman Brian May said in an email that the company had no comment.

BASKETBALL

NEW YORK (AP) - Draymond Green was fined $25,000 but not suspended by the NBA for kicking Oklahoma City center Steven Adams in the groin.

The league also upgraded the foul to a flagrant 2, which would have resulted in an automatic ejection had officials given it that ruling when it happened. That moved him closer to an automatic suspension for accumulation of flagrant foul points.

But Green will be on the court when the Warriors try to even the Western Conference finals at 2-2 on Tuesday at Oklahoma City.

Green was called for a flagrant 1 foul after he was fouled by Adams with 5:57 remaining in the second quarter and kicked his leg up into Adams' groin. Though the Thunder felt it was intentional, Green and Warriors coach Steve Kerr said they believed the flagrant would actually be rescinded by the league.

FIFA

GENEVA (AP) - FIFA has fired its finance director of the past 13 years, removing another fixture of the Sepp Blatter presidential era in another round of revelations about irregular million-dollar payments.

Markus Kattner's exit came after he spent several months in his highest profile role at the scandal-rocked world soccer body - as its interim top administrator promoting FIFA's wish to change its tainted culture even as his links to other investigations added up.

FIFA said Kattner was fired after an internal investigation said he allegedly broke his legal responsibilities to the organization "in connection with his employment contract."

The 45-year-old German official was due payments worth millions of dollars over a six-year period from 2008-14 from additions to his contract, a person familiar with the FIFA investigation said.

The extra payments were known to then-President Blatter and then-secretary general Jerome Valcke, Kattner's immediate boss in that period.

IMAGINE CLEAN STORMWATER

Fact: Yard Waste Matters

Leaves and grass washed down the city's storm drainage system is a form of water pollution. Annually, it accounts for One Fifth of all garbage generated in the U.S.

Yard waste decomposes in local creeks, ponds, lakes and the Trinity River causing algae to grow. Large algae blooms deplete water of life giving oxygen. And, without oxygen in the water, aquatic animals and plant life can suffocate.

Sweeping or blowing yard waste into storm drains can result in a $2,000 fine.

Yard Work Tips:

- Never sweep or blow yard waste into the street or down storm drains.
- Sweep or blow grass clippings from your sidewalk, driveway and street back onto your yard because they will act as fertilizer.
- Fallen leaves can be mulched and left on the lawn.
- Leaves can be bagged and stored until bulk waste collection day in your neighborhood.
- Or compost your leaves and grass clippings turning them into wonderful natural fertilizer.

Contact City of Dallas Stormwater Management at Stormwater@DallasCityHall.com or 214-948-4022 to learn more or to request a presentation for your organization, school or business.
